Together for Hope:
Turning Towards Life

A Community
 Comes Together

Running together, painting together, reading, playing, worshipping together—a community turned towards life the first weekend of May. Part conference, part mission event, the Lake Providence gathering will long be remembered for its unifying excitement.

Public and private school students drew dreams of community, then saw them painted in public community space. A small army of local volunteers donated their time, money, materials, energy and creativity to support the events.

Professional TLC was given on the football field by adults whose college and pro skill and experience on the grid iron were overshadowed by their warmth and generosity in the shaping of young lives.

Education, a pillar in the foundation of overcoming poverty was celebrated in reading, in the giving of books and Bibles and by supporting parents in creating a book shelf and memories together with their children. Local donations and those from Fellowship people raised enough money to provide the first year of scholarship for a local student to attend Arkansas Baptist College!

The gospel was shared in word and in action, in a rally, on the playground and in the connecting of lives through sharing of hearts. Lake Providence was a long way for some of our folks to travel and some regulars were not able to attend. Yet through our mission events, volunteers and participants swelled the ranks to over double our normal numbers, and attracted some younger faces. God's economy was shown again: by giving we receive.

This issue focuses on Spring Assembly, in Lake Providence, which was a turning point event for CBF Louisiana. Everything about it was different from previous "meetings." More hands-on, and ground-breaking. We are grateful for the skill and passion Kyle Kelley brings to our rural poverty ministry. Many others also made it a great success, especially Dr. Fitz Hill. The enclosed photos tell the story and it was a wonder to behold. ●●●●●●●●●● exploration of at least two such ministries. Small group interaction will allow each individual to discover community, information and opportunities in ministries toward which they feel curiously drawn.

Such an approach reminds me of the wonderful Missions Fair I attended at First Baptist, Shreveport. Never have I seen anything quite like that, before or since, and it opened my thinking to all kinds of new possibilities.

This one hour interlude of fellowship, sharing and relationship-building promises to infuse new energy into our experience as the Body of Christ.

Even more important than exposure to new missional ministries will be the celebrating of collegiality among neighboring states. We will shape new bridges that lead to more efficient use of time, energy and resources as we pool efforts on certain projects and pull together in the same direction.

If able, please commit to this unique sister-states meeting in Houston, on Thursday, July 2nd, at 4:30pm. It will be worth your time. ●●●●●●●●●●

Last week, I spent three days on the road, visiting with CBF friends from Alexandria, Natchitoches, Coushatta, and Shreveport, before going to a regional emergency preparedness meeting in Lafayette and attending a VOAD (Volunteer Organizations Assisting in Disaster) board meeting. We have a lot of friends out there who are clearly appreciative of CBF's values.

Next week, Jarrett Banks is hosting a peer-group meeting of CBF-friendly pastors. We look forward to a great time of fellowship and community building.

Grace, mercy and peace, Reid

In a recent retreat attended by CBF Coordinators from Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Missouri, my assigned role was to serve as the facilitator for a series of informal conversations around several strategic questions.

The purpose of such conversation was to nurture communication, coordination, and collaboration among these several contiguous sister-states, with a view to planning one or more specific events which would allow us to work together toward a common focus.

One idea arising out of this process was to combine our state meetings during the upcoming CBF Annual Assembly, held July 2-3, in Houston.

I wholeheartedly support this idea and ask you to do the same, although such a move defies the seven last words of the Church: "We've never done it that way before!"

The plan is to offer a few exciting snapshots of missional ministries in which some of our churches have invested time, passion and energy to produce rather soul-stirring outcomes.

Enough time will be allotted each attendee for closer

Together for Hope Missionary Update

Our search committee remains active. The initial candidate for our new missionary position had to withdraw due to family considerations. The committee is again evaluating applications from the other candidates who have applied, and accepting new resumes. Please pray for this work.
